In the vicinity of the village of Fay, the allies infantry pressed the Germans so hard with their violent offensive that they are now intrenched in positions which are in touch with the wire entanglements, which stretch along the front of the German trenches.

Disaster was met by the German artillery detachments in the Aisne re-gion, when, in the fighting of yester-day between Vailly and Berry-au-Baca group of the enemy's machine guns was singled out by the French gun-ners and destroyed. The foundation of one of the German thirty-centimetre pieces was wrecked by the French fire, and one of the shells from the allies' lines struck a caisson of ammunition behind a German battery causing an explosion which spread death among the gun-servers.
